The contracts involved the supply and installation of fixed scaffolding to allow access to the works, ensuring segregation of the public on the busy public highway at all times. A grid system was fixed over the existing zinc cladding to pan from curtain wall height up to roof height then the Ash & Lacy Alucobond cladding panels were fixed to the grid system complete with all cappings, closures and soffits. The projects are some of the first 'express' style Lidl stores which the European discount supermarket chain are currently trialing in the UK. Lidl do not operate stores of this type in other areas of Europe at present however they have recently introduced the concept in the UK.
